

Driving With Dementia: Is It Safe?

When a loved one with dementia is no longer able to make good decisions on the road, it may be time for them to stop driving. Learn common signs that a person shouldn't be behind the wheel, and consult your family physician for additional guidance.

Know the signs:

1. Increased accidents or unexplained damage.
2. Confusion over colors, words, and standard road rules.
3. Confusing the brake and gas pedals.
4. Getting lost in familiar places.
5. Uncharacteristic episodes of anger or road rage.
